

Machine learning is a field of artificial intelligence. It uses statistical techniques to give computer systems the ability to 'learn' from data. Common applications include recommendation engines and image recognition. This learning process is driven by large datasets and algorithms that identify patterns within the data. The two primary methods are supervised learning, which uses labelled data, and unsupervised learning, which finds patterns in unlabelled data.